Many persons have their good day and their bad day. Others are about half sick all the time. They have headache, backache, and are restless and nervous. Food does not taste good, and the digestion is poor; the skin is dry and sallow and disfigured with pimples or eruptions; sleep brings no rest and work is a burden.

What is the cause of all this? Impure blood. And the remedy?

It clears out the channels through which poisons are carried from the body. When ill impurities are removed from he blood nature takes right hold and completes the cure.

If there is constipation, take aver's Pills. They awaken the drowsy action of the liver; they ente biliousness.

THE FIRST GUN AT GETTYSBURG The anniversary is near at hand of he great battle of Gettysburg, which the lieutenant commanding the picket began on the morning of July 1, 1863, and ended on the afternoon of the 3rd, the last act in the bloody drama being the world renowned charge of Picketts ment. No one in our column either division. The third corps of the Confederate army commanded by General A. P. Hill, crossed the Potomac river at Sheperdstown, about the 20th of June. Our battalion of artillery, Col. Pegram's, belonged to this corps, being immediately attached to the famous light division. The ford here is deep and the current runs strong. We, of the artillery, mounted on horses, limbers and caisons crossed over with dry feet, halted on the other side and watched the passage of the infantry, and great fun it was. Taking off their shoes and slinging their cartridge belts around their necks, marching by fours, and joining hands to steady themselves against the current in they plunged with shouts of laughter and yells, like a lot of school boys in bathing. All the infantry being over we advanced along the Hagerstown pike, passed through hat place and marched directly for the Pennsylvania line. Perhaps no great general of modern times was less qualiied by nature for carrying war into an enemy's country than Lee. The strict-est orders had been issued to the army, as to keeping hands off of everything belonging to the inhabitants, and we were expected to march through a country belonging to people who had ent armies to devestate Virginian, somewhat as folks promenade about parks in a city, on the watch for notices 'keep off the grass." However, acci-l-nts will happen. The batteries marched in front, preceded by a small party of infantry sharpshooters. Late

a the afternoon we crossed the State

There happened to be just over the border, a large farm house, with a barn yard full of fat fowls. A half dozen of these sharpshooters, scarcely taking time to halz, dropped their rifles to the I was seriously afflicted with a cough to the shoulder; there was a loud report, the feathers flew from six chickens, the feathers flew from six chickens from six chickens, the feathers flew from six chickens from six chickens flew from six chickens from six chic the fence, gathered up the game, and cooly marched on. Some officers came galloping up from the rear, demanding to know where the enemy were. Somone told them "They were all dead." We reached our permanent camp next day, which was along the Cashtown pike, and near the hamlet of that name. The people finding out contrary to their expectation that we had not come to invade them "with fire and sword" supplied us with good things to eat, and we began to enjoy life. Parties would be sent out to impress, or rather buy, horses for the artillery service, and, being a non-commissioned officer, I was frequently sent in charge of one of these details. It was a thickly popu lated country, divided into small farms in a high state of cultivation. We would ride up to a house and the men seeing us approach would conceal the horses. A curious feature about these farms was the small dwelling houses, and huge red barns. The interior of the houses showed no evidence of any desire for refinement and taste, as mignt be found in even the humblest home in Virginia; grown girls would be attending to their duties about the place "barefooted." The soldiers called them all "Dutch gals," for what reason I don't know, unless it was because they were so fat and robust. When the hors s were brought out, the women and children would set up such a weeping and wailing and appeals to me, that being only a boy and soft-hearted. Not withstanding my own people had been harried down in Virginia, I found it an unpleasant duty. I would leave a receipt for such horses as we took with instructions that on presenting it to the chief quartermaster of the division, he would pay for them, and no doubt he did so, in good honest Confederate money, if his short stay in Pennsylva. nia allowed him.

On the morning of the 1st of July the division under command of Gen Harry Heth broke camp about sunrice and took up the line of march toward Gettysburg. The advance guard consisted of the artillery and Archer's and Davis's brigades of infantry, the artillery in front. The day was lovely; a fresh breeze rippled over the wheat fields stretching away on either side of us, and we rode forward not dreaming of the proximity of any enemy. Somewhere between the hours of 7 and So'clock Col. Pegram's attention was suddenly called to a line of men over on a hill ahead of us and to the right of the road. From the distance we could not tell whether they were friend or foe. However, Col. Pegram deemed it prudent to halt his column. Gen. Thos. A. Brander, then captain of one of our batteries and always ready for a fight, insisted that they were yankees, and that we fire upon them. It soon proved that he was right. It happened that the Fredericksburg artillery was at the head of the column, and at a word from Col. Pegram the leading gun, a 3-inch rifle piece, was leading gun, a 3-inch rifle piece, was unlimbered and swung around, loaded unlimbered and swung around, loaded trained on the with shrapnel shell and trained on the over the fields, and thus was fired the first gun of the battle of Gettysburg.

The enemy brought up some of their artillery and soon replied. All was now bustle and excitement. Generals knows, gained a brilliant victory. But this is no attempt to write the history > rank and file, ever mounted a horse, as many people yet living in the Northern Neck of Virginia will attest. Well, this regiment, it turns out, had a fight down the road in their front, and saw our approach a long way off. These doughty heroes and valiant robbers of Virginia meat houses and insulters of defenseless women thought it a good opportunity to gain immortal fame, so seized the carbine from the bands of the sergeant, pointed it in the direction of our then far off column and fired. This we have from their own printed statesaw this picket or heard the report of the gun. Upon the strength of this they have erected a large monument on the spot with the names of all inscribed upon it who composed the picket, besides a lot of ridiculous nonsense about the first gun at the "battle of Gettysburg." However, let them build monument on top of monument, claim on top of claim, it is well known upon what a mere "scratch" they finally gained the battle. Napoleon said that the result of a war was often decided by one great battle, and a battle by a comparatively small incident. There can be no doubt about the fact that the battle of Gettysburg would have been a Confederate victory but for the absence of Corse's brigade. Had that stauch old brigade been with its division, we might have exclaimed with Macauley-"Hurrah! hurrah! a single charge has turned the tide of war," &c.
